

ATTACK AT EP-CYG-4

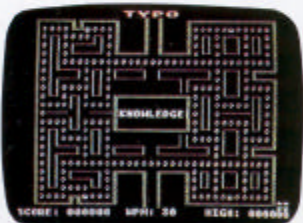

You have just been revived from four years of suspended animation. You have traveled 20 light years from earth in your burst-drive interstellar transport. You are orbiting the fourth planet of EPsilon CyGnus inhabited by a machine race of tartillians. They have already destroyed their humanoid creators and have sworn the destruction of all humanoid forms. Quick reflexes and nerves of steel are needed to combat the ground and space forces you encounter. These forces increase in number, skill and intensity as your threat to their extinction becomes apparent. Your survival and victory depend on your marksmanship and manuverability. The Tar-tillians await . . . on EP-CYG-4.

FROG and PRINCESS

Fairy tales come true on your own television if skill and luck are with you. The ageless story of the frog meeting the princess and turning into a prince is in your hands. The princess awaits you in her castle tower surrounded by the protective forces of knights in armor and the menacing creatures of the castle moat. You must skillfully guide the frog past the jousting knights and menacing creatures in the castle moat. If you escape the lance of the galloping knights, the treachery of the creatures in the moat won't be as forgiving. Your timing must be exact if you're going to score with the princess . . . and score you must, if you're going to be transformed into a prince and live happily ever after.

TYPO

Typo is a computer game that is much more than just another game. The skill you develop with Typo is one that will be useful for your entire life. The popular theme of a maze game is combined with typing drill to create a funfilled and challenging exercise in learning. Not only will you develop the skill of touch typing, but your speed will increase with every fun-filled hour you spend playing the game. You set the speed of the game in words per minute and reward or punishment await you at every turn in the maze. Typo proves learning can be fun.
